

Ladies and Gentlemen,

We here at ETC think of all of you as part of our family, and we all love you equally. However, we love some of you more equally than others, and one of the most equally loved of our students is Mr. Jake Bell.

If you know Jake, you know he is quite a character, however you may not know about his storied past.

In his younger days Jake “Tiny Hands” Bell worked for one of the largest crime syndicates of Belarus, reaching third in command by the age of 17. Luckily, after witnessing one too many potato wagons get senselessly tipped over, he escaped his life of extortion, and created a new beginning in America.

After attending an unknown American high school his senior year, Jake was accepted to Illinois State University, then progressed to Eastern Oregon University studying Business Administration.

After graduating, Jake tried out for a B-league basketball team to fulfill his dream of becoming the next Earl Boykins. This is when Jake’s life really began. His basketball career would start him down a path of stardom.

Jake became a fairly well-known C-list celebrity, opening up opportunities that he never could have imagined. Using his stardom, Jake stepped into the glamorous world of Hollywood. However, all that glitters isn’t gold. Jake had a rough start at first, and needed to build a reputation, taking any role he could get. Unfortunately, this would lead to an embarrassing roll in a risque film that would haunt Jake for the rest of his career.

Although shameful, Semi-Pro helped get Jake’s name out. It eventually landed him some larger cameo rolls, and even his own commercial deal with MacDonald’s, the Asian knock-off version of the much more lucrative McDonald’s restaurant chain.

Jake found his true passion in the movie industry. He hung up his jersey and moved to Hollywood to pursue acting and directing full time. He invested in several movies, including multiple spin offs.

The Five Amigos

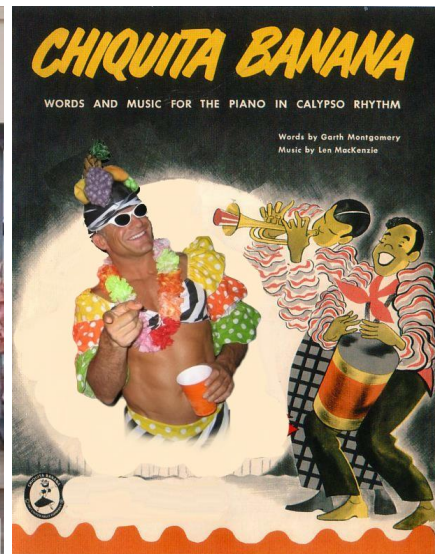

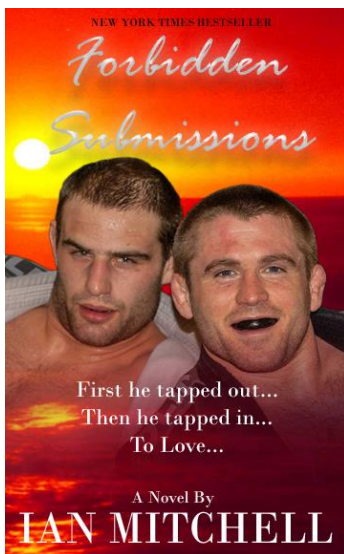

Star Wars:
Return of Canuto

Pirates of the Gulf of Mexico

With the success from his movies, Jake branched into other entertainment industries such as books, magazines, music, and even toys.

All this success, however, had Jake popping up on the radar again. After a few incidents involving him, his actors, and some small children, Jake's old mob buddies tracked him down.

Before long, the mob had several hits out on Jake. Several of the hitmen, including FBI's most wanted Foster 'Fozzy Bear' Bailey, and the notorious Peter '2Straub' Straub, had Jake reeling from close calls.

These encounters drove Jake to seek action to defend himself. After a short search, Jake found Easton Training Center and began training immediately. He caught on quickly, and started competing. After several large competition wins, culminating in a 2014 Pan Ams Championship, Jake gained quite a following.

Showing his combative skills, Jake has scared off any mob hits. Since his early days, things have calmed down significantly. These days you can find Jake hanging around the Easton academies or at his castle with his family.

In all seriousness, Jake has long been a core member of the Easton Training Center family, and an active contributor to our growing community. He enriches our training environment with his attitude, and our facebook feeds with his masterful works of photoshop art. We're incredibly proud of him and all of his achievements.
